

Ahead of the Curve

INEGI's Timely Indicator of Economic Activity will probably show a sharper downturn in January

Weekly international reserves report (February 12). Last week, net international reserves decreased US$220 million, closing at US$195.7 billion (please refer to the following table). According to Banxico's report, this was mainly explained by a negative valuation effect in institutional assets. So far this year, the central bank's international reserves have increased by US$59 million.

Timely Indicator of Economic Activity (January). On Friday, INEGI will release its Timely Indicator of Economic Activity for January, along revised figures for December. We recall that November's mid-point forecast stood at -4.3% y/y (using seasonally adjusted figures), which was ultimately lower than the -3.5% final print. We expect December's forecast, currently at -5.4%, to be revised upwards. This is based on data published since then –especially the latest GDP and IP reports–. Meanwhile, we believe January's print could show an additional sequential contraction given a further deterioration in epidemiological conditions, along the decline in other key and more timely indicators, such as ANTAD sales and auto sector data, among others.

No guarantee can be given that the target prices calculated for the securities will be achieved by the analysts of Grupo Financiero Banorte S.A.B.
